It seems that everyone around me is having babies, both back home in England and here where I live in the village of Abene, Senegal. I think there is a lot that Europe can learn from Africa about child care. And vice versa of course. I've always maintained that Gulliver is lucky in that he'll be raised, hopefully, with the best of both traditions.
I felt a little lost at the beginning - I had one baby book and that was it. I soon 1/l and went with the 2/o which seemed to work well. If that's possible in the West, I'd certainly 3/c it. Fashions come and go and I've been reading about various child rearing 4/e from the past few years that have already been 5/s All you can do is what you feel is best and it probably will be. You'll never be perfect and accepting that will be 6/n for you and the child in the long 7/
I tried introducing a feeding 8/h, but Khady just fed him when he was hungry, 9/n what I said and it worked fine. Most of these systems are 10/s for the parents' 11/n in a very busy Western work culture. That's not 12/p to us.
African women usually 13/ for at least two years and often longer.
14/t are not much of an 15/ here (the formula isn't good quality and 16/e would be a nightmare). Obviously, this is much easier when you're not going to work in an office. Khady works, but Gulliver is always there, trying to help.
As a 17/m_, we always eat from a communal platter in the local 18/y and he eats whatever we eat unless it's overly spicy. I've seen many African children and I've never met a 19/s eater. Maybe we've got that to 20/, but for now, he happily eats all his 21/e and even loves olives. Maybe he's already realised that if he doesn't eat what he's given, it goes to the 22/ and there'll be nothing else, aside from milk.
Babies always sleep with parents in Africa and many 23/v countries, at least for two or three years. At first I wasn't too 24/e_ on this, but now it's fine and I love it - at 25/ neither of us have ever had to get up in the night.
When I asked Khady about postnatal 26/p she seemed confused, then said women don't have time for that in Africa. The 27/a is that they're always surrounded by people and life continues much the 28/ That does of course bring its own 29/s of privacy for me, but is 30/f advantageous to the children.
Everyone helps out and babies are not seen as such a big deal. I think that's such an important point. In England, for example, the mother has months of attention while pregnant, a week or two's attention once the baby arrives, and then that's it. Get on with it. The dad goes back to work and she's left at home with a screaming bundle of joy for days on end
